2) the number of the above inspections for which a forewarning of inspection was given the inspected business; See detail above.

3) where notification was given to any business with the above categories before an inspection was carried out, the median and maximum amount of time given between notifying that an inspection would take place, and the actual inspection. Degree of advanced notice varies from a few hours to several days. The intention of providing advanced warning is generally to ensure that critical persons are present or that the premises (which may be over three hours drive from the office) are open at the time the inspection or audit is undertaken. The process is not intended to provide a period in which the subject can prepare for the inspection or audit.
