Hi Marcus,

Kevin and I just had a chance to catch up on this – we think because the Faculty is not changing the type of assessment (i.e. it's still an exam), but rather the mode of assessment that it is a reasonable adjustment to make.

Bridget, would you agree?

Thanks Heather, any guidance would be much appreciated.

We understand that as the policy stands at the moment we can't change the assessment (because the teaching is halfway completed) but would like to change to in person exams if possible since we are concerned about academic integrity for these foundation courses.

Thanks again and looking forward to hearing from you

Ah, of course. Apologies, I didn't read your email properly. The second part of an AB is technically the part that is assessed, but I think we'd have to check with John that he's happy for the policy on assessment changes to be applied in this way. There may be other courses in the same category (Nursing?)

I think the provision allowing 'substantive changes' to assessment up until the start of teaching would cover this. Kevin, would you agree?

Dear Heather,

I've caught up with Bronwyn re the discussion around exam policy in sem 2 at the ADcop meeting on Monday.

I would like to ask that, if possible, the policy should make it clear what we can do for papers which have already started teaching but have advertised that they are having an online exams. Is there any possibility to change to in person exams for these courses in light of our experience re academic integrity with sem 1 exams?

In particular, we have six full year courses which we would like to move to in person exams but the DCOs etc have been saying they will have online exams since the start of the year.

Any help/guidance much appreciated.
Thank you very much in advance
Marcus

Hi Heather,
Thank you very much for these. Unfortunately I can't be there on Monday as I'm teaching, but Bronwyn will be flying the law flag.
However, two points I'd like to note:

1. Law will be applying for exceptions for most/all (depending on course director approval) of our Council of Legal Education (CLE) courses to be examined and invigilated on campus. At most, that will be 10 courses. This is in light of the experience of exams in sem 1, collaboration allegations and the risk assessment that it is less likely we will slip into lockdown in November! Not sure if other faculties will ask for exemptions, but it might be interesting to see indicative numbers and what impact that has on the process of approval and time frame (both of which would be good to have asap).
2. The course offerings online for overseas students from 2022 will be of two types: those we need to offer because they are CLE requirements and those that are being offered because we think they will work well online. We need to think how we communicate that to students overseas since the CLE required courses won't necessarily be gold standard online offerings, but are only offered because we have to. That is, we won't be effectively teaching two courses (online and on-campus) for the CLE courses, but the other, elective courses we say are available to be offered online will be because they do work well online.

Hope that helps, let me know if you have any questions at all!
Have a great weekend
Marcus

There are several matters to work through on Monday, most of which are marked in the attached documents. If you are unable to attend, please send through any comments you have and I will do my best to pick them up in the discussion.

Subject: In person exams in sem 2?

Dear all,

At the start of semester 1 this year the Uni made a decision that all exams would be held online and uninvigilated. This was to provide certainty and to avoid a repeat of last year when the exams had to go online halfway through the exam period.

However, after our experience of uninvigilated exams in sem 1, there are very good reasons to believe that there has been increased incidents of academic misconduct in the law exams.

With that in mind, and with the hope that lockdowns will be less likely to happen as the year continues (famous last words I know...) the Executive believes that the reasons to keep the sem 2 exams online are less strong than they were. This is particularly true of our CLE mandated papers (Contract, Torts, Public, Criminal, Land, Equity, Ethics) and our papers which provide entry into part II (121, 131 and 141). If you are willing, I intend to apply for exemptions from the University for these papers to be held in person, invigilated on-campus (just like they were prior to COVID). We will have to prepare an online exam format for these papers as well in case we go into lockdown quickly.

Therefore, as course directors of these papers, would you please be able to let me know by Wed next week (30 June) whether or not you would like your exam at the end of sem 2 back on campus. The shortened timeframe is so we can apply for exemptions from the Uni and then let the students know asap.

If you do not wish to change, then your exam will continue to be online, time limited and uninvigilated (as the sem 1 exams have been).

Please let me know if you have any questions at all.

All the best

Subject: In person exams in sem 2?

Dear all,

At the start of semester 1 this year the Uni made a decision that all exams would be held online and uninvigilated. This was to provide certainty and to avoid a repeat of last year when the exams had to go online halfway through the exam period.

However, after our experience of uninvigilated exams in sem 1, there are very good reasons to believe that there has been increased incidents of academic misconduct in the law exams.

With that in mind, and with the hope that lockdowns will be less likely to happen as the year continues (famous last words I know...) the Executive believes that the reasons to keep the sem 2 exams online are less strong than they were. This is particularly true of our CLE mandated papers (Contract, Torts, Public, Criminal, Land, Equity, Ethics) and our papers which provide entry into part II (121, 131 and 141). If you are willing, I intend to apply for exemptions from the University for these papers to be held in person, invigilated on-campus (just like they were prior to COVID). We will have to prepare an online exam format for these papers as well in case we go into lockdown quickly.

Therefore, as course directors of these papers, would you please be able to let me know by Wed next week (30 June) whether or not you would like your exam at the end of sem 2 back on campus. The shortened timeframe is so we can apply for exemptions from the Uni and then let the students know asap.

If you do not wish to change, then your exam will continue to be online, time limited and uninigilated (as the sem 1 exams have been).

Please let me know if you have any questions at all.

All the best

I've been in touch with Dylan (cc'd) as he's teaching 121 next semester. Given what we've been through in first semester he would like to seek an exemption to the online rule so that 121 can have an in-person exam in semester 2.

If you have any questions or need more info, don't hesitate to get in touch.

Many thanks and have a lovely weekend,

Yes, I agree that it is necessary, but is there any way that the Torts exam could be typewritten not handwritten? That would make a big difference for me, and I think also, Tim, who I see is cc'd in.

Law 121G Law and Society
Law 131 Legal Method
Law 141 Legal Foundations
Law 201 Criminal Law
Law 211 Public Law
Law 231 Law of Torts
Law 241 Law of Contract

Law 458 Jurisprudence

These courses are either a requirement for selection into a limited entry programme or are required for professional accreditation.

If the exemptions are granted, the students and Exams Office will be advised as soon as possible.

Hi Marcus,

Kevin and I just had a chance to catch up on this – we think because the Faculty is not changing the type of assessment (i.e. it's still an exam), but rather the mode of assessment that it is a reasonable adjustment to make.

Bridget, would you agree?

Ah, of course. Apologies, I didn't read your email properly. The second part of an AB is technically the part that is assessed, but I think we'd have to check with John that he's happy for the policy on assessment changes to be applied in this way. There may be other courses in the same category (Nursing?)

Dear Heather,

I've caught up with Bronwyn re the discussion around exam policy in sem 2 at the ADcop meeting on Monday.

I would like to ask that, if possible, the policy should make it clear what we can do for papers which have already started teaching but have advertised that they are having an online exams. Is there any possibility to change to in person exams for these courses in light of our experience re academic integrity with sem 1 exams?

In particular, we have six full year courses which we would like to move to in person exams but the DCOs etc have been saying they will have online exams since the start of the year.

Any help/guidance much appreciated.

Thank you very much in advance

Hi Heather,

Thank you very much for these. Unfortunately I can't be there on Monday as I'm teaching, but Bronwyn will be flying the law flag.

However, two points I'd like to note:

1. Law will be applying for exceptions for most/all (depending on course director approval) of our Council of Legal Education (CLE) courses to be examined and invigilated on campus. At most, that will be 10 courses. This is in light of the experience of exams in sem 1, collaboration allegations and the risk assessment that it is less likely we will slip into lockdown in November! Not sure if other faculties will ask for exemptions, but it might be interesting to see indicative numbers and what impact that has on the process of approval and time frame (both of which would be good to have asap).

2. The course offerings online for overseas students from 2022 will be of two types: those we need to offer because they are CLE requirements and those that are being offered because we think they will work well online. We need to think how we communicate that to students overseas since the CLE required courses won't necessarily be gold standard online offerings, but are only offered because we have to. That is, we won't be effectively teaching two courses (online and on-campus) for the CLE courses, but the other, elective courses we say are available to be offered online will be because they do work well online.

Hope that helps, let me know if you have any questions at all!

Have a great weekend

Sorry to hold you up Marcus. BK and KM are discussing finalisation of the policy today, at this stage we have not made any changes to the criteria set down to allow exemptions for on campus delivery (i.e. accreditation, selective entry, performance etc). However, I can't swear to that until the policy is finalised.

Dear Heather and Kevin,

We are starting the draft data collection for sem 2 and need to confirm in course view whether the exams are in person or online.

Have we got to the stage where we can confirm that the exemptions for sem 2 exams will be granted? We need to start letting students/course directors know as well if possible.

Thanks very much

Marcus

Importance: High

Dear Heather,

Please find below the number of online students in each course for law exams asking for an exemption for on campus exams at the end of sem 2.

Please note that the following is the headcount by course at as today. LAW121G, 131, 141 and LAW458 numbers are subject to changes, as the last day to change Sem 2 enrolments is Friday 30th July. Especially for LAW131 and 141, we are likely to drop over 100 students from both courses, once LAW121G Sem 1 results are out and there will be over 100 students not meeting the minimum grade to progress to 131/141. Therefore, we may run a student list now as an indication, and run a final list after Friday 30th July. (FYI – the last day to change double-semester AB enrolments was 26th March, so we don't expect any change in the Pt 2 or Pt 3 double-semester courses.)

Good afternoon all,
Sorry for this confusion but that list is incorrect in one respect – the last course should read “Law 458 Legal Ethics”. The course number is correct, but the name is not. Everything else is as stated.
Thanks
Marcus

Dear Bridget,
In accordance with cl 14 of the Semester 2 Teaching Delivery and Exams Policy just published, the law faculty would like to apply for an exception to conduct exams in person for the following papers at the end of semester 2:

Law 121G Law and Society
Law 131 Legal Method
Law 141 Legal Foundations
Law 201 Criminal Law
Law 211 Public Law
Law 231 Law of Torts
Law 241 Law of Contract
Law 301 Land Law
Law 306 Equity
Law 458 Jurisprudence

These courses are either a requirement for selection into a limited entry programme or are required for professional accreditation.

Thank you in advance for your response. It would be great if we would like to let students know as soon as possible, particularly those in the full year courses.

All the best
Marcus
