Geoff yes you did send with bolded answers apart from question 16-in any event it is always difficult to do multi-questions with choices some of which could involve fine judgement calls.

One other university also presented a multi-choice question but added at the end that at least for 2 of the questions the students elaborate with providing detailed reasons which I thought was a more compelling case to justify a multi-choice question.I am not suggesting you change course appreciating just how difficult it is to provide credible choices.But maybe next time round you could consider the added feature of seeking justification for answers given in 2 or more questions provided.

The only other matter is for the answer to question 2 is it right to add at the end after reference to theTPA is the answer because of odd jobs rather than the promise to give Eru the house albeit supported by helping out with odd jobs.

Geoff I am happy to approve the exam paper and because the paper send has the bolded answers I suggest I hold on my file rather send back a signed off paper-so assume all is ready to go.

Best wishes with the exam results [redacted]

Hi John

I thought I had sent you a version with the correct mutlichoice answer bolded - let me know if I didn't

The fiduciary question is really asking for a comparison with Chrinside v Fay and the variation Boardman v Phipps .

Is that enough? Once again if I sent you the wrong version

Hi John

Sorry for delay . Here is the draft exam. It is worth 60 of the final grade. The students have just done an opinion on whether the the Supreme Court should allow the appeal in Cooper v Pinney., which was worth 40 per cent.

You will see that we are trying multichoice to focus on particular things in the course. We are still playing around with the wording - and these kinds of questions scare me a bit, but I think they are sufficiently développed enough to show you the range of things we are asking

Any questions please just call [redacted]

I'm sorry this has taken me so long

Geoff
